McRae-Zook, Doty win by 40-vote margin

By Karen McGrath
Kaimin News Editor

After an extremely close race, Marquette McRae-Zook is the new ASUM president.

McRae-Zook and her running mate, John Doty, collected an even 700 votes, or about 51.4 percent.

Presidential candidate Frank Cote and his running mate, Carla Smith, pulled 660 votes, or 48.5 percent.

"I'm ecstatic," McRae-Zook said. "Frank fought a good campaign and put up a lot of good issues. It was a good fight."

"I hope we can all work together toward a better ASUM, because it needs it," Cote said.

ASUM President Steve Spaulding said, "In the past, candidates with the best organization and campaign have won, regardless of their philosophy. That was the case here."

Jim Brennan took the business manager's position with 688 votes. He defeated present business manager Mike Copeland, who had 551 tallies.

"I think there can be some changes made that haven't been done in past years," Brennan said. "I think Marquette and I will get a lot done and I'm going to give it my best effort."

Copeland had no comment.

Johnson ignores differences with Spaulding at term's end

Editor's note: This is the second of a two-part series in which outgoing ASUM Vice President Eric Johnson looks back on his year in office.

By Karen McGrath
Kaimin News Editor

He has been blamed for partially causing a serious rift in ASUM administrative relations, but to hear ASUM Vice President Eric Johnson talk, you'd think the differences between him and ASUM President Steve Spaulding almost are nonexistent.

Johnson drifts away from any discussion of Spaulding. He said he will not "muckrake" about Spaulding now, at the end of his term.

Johnson, 32, is a senior in psychology from Whitefish. He and Spaulding were elected to office Feb. 25, 1981.

According to some ASUM insiders, the personal and political differences between Spaulding and Johnson were some of the major problems that ASUM government had this year.

"Politically, they (Spaulding and Johnson) are ideologically opposed," said CB member Anitra Hall. "I'm saddened they could not have worked better together. It caused dissension on the (Central) Board."

"I always felt like we had to take sides," Hall added. "That shouldn't happen in any administration."

CB member Marquette McRae-Zook said, "It's too bad they couldn't have communicated better. At times, one was at fault, then another. You can't lay blame on any one person."

While Johnson and Spaulding disagreed on several topics, those disagreements did not seem to stop their administration from functioning.

Some examples of 1981-82 ASUM government accomplishments:

- Previous to this administration, students had to inquire about jobs at a job service downtown. Through ASUM efforts, there is now a job service representative that visits the campus two days a week and relays information about jobs that appeals specifically to college students.

- A new ASUM committee was formed that sends students and UM instructional materials to inmates at the Montana State Prison. The ASUM Deer Lodge Committee now is working with a campus fraternity to bring a more varied number of campus movies, books and other materials to prisoners.
- ASUM started a student discount system but still is working to get more Missoula business participation in the program. Johnson said the outlook is good that UM students will have such a system within a year.
- This has been the first year that ASUM has come up with a workable system to fill all ASUM committee vacancies. As vice president, Johnson is in charge of all committees. He created the ASUM Vice Presidential Committee to oversee all other ASUM committees. This committee reported to Johnson on committee member attendance and cooperation.
- "Eric created quite a few committees to help students," said ASUM secretary Brenda Perry.

Improved lighting requested by CB

By Sam Richards
Kaimin Reporter

As its final act, the 1981-82 Central Board voted to send a request for campus lighting improvements to University of Montana President Neil Bucklew and to Vice President of Fiscal Affairs Patricia Douglas.

The letter will be accompanied by several petitions signed by students supporting improved lighting. The signatures totaled about 500.

CB delegate Jim Brennan, sophomore in sociology and social work, drew up the letter, which suggested the improvements be funded from the building fees reserve fund and outlined six areas where lights would be useful. Those areas are:

- between the oval and the underground Lecture Hall
- the west side of the library
- the walkway between the north end of the University Center and the botany building
- the clover bowl
- the traveled area between the fieldhouse and the footbridge across the Clark Fork River.

CB recommended the UM Public Safety Committee set priorities for the areas listed in the letter.

Brennan said the lighting improvements would serve as much to "prevent broken legs and falling down stairs" as for stopping rape.

Richard Vandiver, associate professor of sociology, said lighting wouldn't necessarily

CB sets precedent, overturns decision

By Sam Richards
Kaimin Reporter

Central Board set a precedent March 3 when it overturned an ASUM Publications Board decision to name Brian Rygg, junior in journalism and honors, editor of the Montana Kaimin and extend the application deadline to yesterday.

Journalism professor Bob McGiffert said he had never heard of such a happening in the 15 years he's been teaching at the University of Montana, and current Kaimin editor Stephanie Hanson, senior in journalism and member of the Publications Board, said she also had never heard of such an action before.

"The decision was appropriate, but I have qualms about their overturning it as late as they did," Hanson said. "I think CB acted without the understanding of how the Kaimin has to be run. They could have easily overturned the decision weeks before they did."

Hanson is stepping down as editor this quarter because her term is ending.

Rygg said he understood the reasoning behind the decision, but added that selecting an editor this late gives that person less time to select the next quarter's staff, which he said would be detrimental to the editor and to the staff.

Rygg, now Kaimin managing editor, is still the only applicant for editor.

Tom Hartman, junior in philosophy and a CB representative on the Publications Board, said the decision was not a personal one against Rygg.

"I refuse to believe there's only one person on campus who wants to be editor, and that there's only one person who's qualified," Hartman said.

Fight must continue for higher education

Yesterday, the ASUM Legislative Committee sponsored the use of phones to call Montana's congressional delegation to protest federal cuts in student financial aid.

The committee is cognizant of the danger federal cuts pose for students attending the University of Montana; their efforts are to be praised. However, students must realize that a one-day telephone blitz is not enough. Fighting the Reagan administration's calculated decimation of financial investment in higher education must be continued by everyone connected with the university. The cuts will restrict students' access to higher education and consequently require reductions in faculty and staff comparable to declining enrollments.

When Reagan proposed cutting domestic spending last year, objections were praised. Many taxpayers agreed that reducing spending was an idea whose time had come. But the people on welfare rolls and other forms of aid, perhaps not aware of the extent of the cuts, were not vocal or organized in their opposition. And now, as the cutbacks are implemented and as the aid recipients feel the reductions first hand, vocal, organized opposition is building. Unfortunately it's too late.

Aid for higher education may suffer this same delayed-realization syndrome. The cuts Reagan is proposing are detrimental to the future of higher education. Further Reagan's realignment of the funds U.S. colleges and universities do receive is disconcerting.

The proposals:

- Graduate students would be barred from the Guaranteed Student Loan program.
- A special program of graduate fellowships designed to aid women and minority-group students would be eliminated.
- Students would be required to repay their GSLs at market rates—rather than at 9 percent interest—two years after leaving college.
- The fee students must pay banks when they take out a loan would be increased from 5 to 10 percent.
- Pell Grant funds would be slashed to $1.4 billion next fiscal year, down from $2.28 billion Congress allocated this year.
- The administration is not seeking funds for programs that now contribute to college libraries or cooperative education.
- Funding for the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities would be reduced by nearly 30 percent.
- Universities would be reimbursed for only 90 percent of their indirect costs for National Institutes of Health grants.
- Universities would endure new limitations on the use of tax-exempt bonds for financing campus construction costs and student loans. Reagan's proposal would make bonds subject to the approval of elected local officials. It is feared that as money gets tighter for city projects, campus construction will become a low priority.
- The Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants would be eliminated.
- Reagan has asked to reduce by $44 million the $528 million earmarked for college work-study programs this year. He wants to further reduce spending to $397.5 million next year.

But to complement increased defense spending, Reagan is proposing a 19 percent increase in defense research. A comforting tidbit.

Higher education is facing an uncertain future. As the baby boom generation draws to a close, enrollments will drop. Reinforce that prediction with decreased funding for colleges and universities, and a vicious circle (not enough students, less funding, a hampered quality education) is created.

How can Reagan profess to rebuild America's future when he straps its educational system? Most of the jobs available today require technical training or management abilities. Where but in colleges and universities is this experience gained?

Do not wait to become involved in the effort to save education for students. If the opportunity for seeking higher education is limited, so our future will be.

Glaring mistakes

Editor: Dear Ms. Hanson:

As I have tried to call you several times and have been unable to reach you, I decided writing would be the best way to reach you.

During February you ran two articles which involved telling of the Block Home project that Missoula PTA Council is sponsoring. In each of the articles there were some glaring mistakes that could lead more to confusion than to helping people.

The area needing clarity most is that we do NOT use orange fluorescent stickers! We have cards that are white background with orange figures and an orange house with big letters saying BLOCK HOUSE on them. These are easily set in a window or removed when people are unavailable to be of aid at some particular time.

The Block Home program is not a fly-by-night operation by any means. A great deal of work on the part of many volunteers has gone into setting this up as well as a fair amount of money. Bad publicity, wrong publicity only works against any of the good we are trying to do. As many young women on campus have been attacked we felt that they and all students should be aware of the program, to know how to use it and possibly recruit more homes in the areas where university students live.

Please do clear this up and I would like to suggest that you call Vicki Nichols at 549-2955 before you publish anything to make sure the facts are stated correctly. Vicki is the coordinator of this project for PTA Council.

Most sincerely,
Barbara Millhouse

Clarification

Editor: In the Feb. 26 edition of the Kaimin it was stated that one of my "main funding priorities" would be minority organizations. My comment was that some of those groups had applied for money and many had received little or none whereas others had obtained substantial funding. That being the case, I believe that those groups who received little or no money should receive more in order to be fair to them. I did not state that such organizations would be higher in my priorities for funding considerations than most others. I just noted that they were one example of organizations receiving insufficient funding. Other areas where I would attempt to improve funding are the Kaimin, Debate and Oratory and the Forestry Students Association, but these are only a few examples and not at all a complete list of organizations about which I am concerned about funds.

In the same article I was quoted as saying that I believe ASUM should become less involved in political issues. That is true, but is not a complete representation of my statements. ASUM is designed to be a service to the entire student body, and not just to special interests. Therefore, ASUM should definitely be politically active on issues such as university funding and the student loan program, which are of concern to most if not all students, but ASUM should refrain from being involved in such issues as Right-to-Life and El Salvador. ASUM action on non-university political issues both takes time and money away from more student-oriented concerns and since ASUM represents the entire student body, it should not make political statements that don't necessarily represent the views of most students. That is business better left to groups whose specific interest is in that area, rather than an organization which is assumed to speak for all UM students.

Neither of the quotes mentioned were far astray from what I said, but I believed some clarification was necessary.

Response to Iranians

Editor: In response to the Iranian Moslem students at the University of Montana and their article that appeared in the Kaimin on Thursday (letters, March 4).

It was surprising for us to open the Kaimin and read the editorial regarding the reasons behind the Iraqi-Iranian conflict. As far as ourselves and many others are concerned all publications of this kind should be classed as rhetorical garbage and should be filed accordingly. Unfortunately though, this would violate a few American constitutional rights (i.e.; freedom of press and freedom of speech). We're sure that if we were to contrast our inalienable rights to those in Iran we would be in for a shocking surprise. Unlike Iran our press is not government controlled or do we have to fear reprisals for speaking out.

First a few historical notes. As reported by U.S. News & World Report. "Oman has been trying for four years to form a mutual defense pact between itself, Kuwait, Bahrain, Qatar, United Arab Emirates, and Saudia Arabia. The Iran-Iraq war and Teheran's efforts to destabilize the area has turned the defense pact into a reality." One would have to change the proverb "Something is rotten in Denmark" to read "Something is wrong in Iran." It is fairly obvious that the main culprit is not Iraq but Iran. The main reason for Teheran's role in the war is to tie up the armed forces so that they would be unable to topple the current government.

We also remember hearing, reading, and seeing the red gore that was spread all over the streets in the name of the holy Ayatollah. As in all revolutions or wars innocent bystanders, be they civilians or children, will always fall prey to the wanton destruction caused by radical countries. This includes the Iraq-Iran conflict. To state that Iraq is purposefully slaughtering citizens is stated out of context. Unfortunately it's both sides who are causing innocent people to go "meet the holy mullah." No one country is blameless.

Most surprising of all are the Iranian statements regarding American policies as "Satanic plots." They actually had the nerve to call us that four times (four, count 'em, four!) Where were these three students when the American Embassy was taken over?? Can we ever forget the four hundred and forty-four days of waiting?

They also go so far as to state that both the United States and the Soviet Union are supplying arms to the same side. This is a historical statement in itself. But if it is the case then we wish them the best of luck and may they get many more.

To the Iranian students here at the University of Montana who wrote the article a word of advice. As John Wayne used to say "America! Love it, or leave it!" We don't need these type of garbage articles in our own country. To say we are angry is an understatement. Our feelings for launching a couple of tactical nukes and turning that desert into a radiation wasteland is a paramount concern.

May you be imprisoned somewhere and your diets consist of pork roasts. Yours truly...

Vining to be Missoula's runner in April 19 Boston Marathon

By Renata Birkenbuel
Kaimin Reporter

Missoula will be represented in the Boston Marathon April 19 by Sue Vining, 26, the only local woman to qualify for the race. She will be one of 7,000 runners that Running magazine expects to show up for the marathon.

Vining, dietician at the University of Montana Food Service, qualified for the Boston Marathon by placing 20th in a field of 200 women in the Trails End Marathon at Seaside, Ore., Feb. 22.

Her time, a personal best, was 3:15:21. A qualifying time of 3:20 in a certified marathon is needed to be eligible for the Boston Marathon.

The Trails End Marathon was only the second one Vining has run in. Last year she competed in the Grizzly Dash and placed second of 50 entrants with a time of 3:30.

Vining said she had no idea how she would do in the Trails End race, but that the experience taught her a lot about running.

She said listening to other runners talk during the marathon about racing techniques helped, and that she also learned how to pace herself along the route.

Vining began running a "few miles a day, not very seriously" about six years ago. It was not until the past year that she started taking her running seriously and gradually increased her distances.

"It's a challenge to see how I can do for myself," she said.

Vining runs 10 to 15 miles a day, "usually towards the mountains" and once a week stretches a run to 20 miles. During the weeks preceding a marathon, she ups her distances to 100 to 120 miles a week (running twice a day) and tapers off to about 40 miles the week before the race.

The Rattlesnake and Pattee

SUE VINING

Canyon are Vining's favorite trails, which she calls a "nice escape from work and the city."

One-and-one-half to two hours of Vining's day are spent training during the late afternoons and evenings. She runs alone about half the time, but trains with other runners the other half.

Athletics were not a part of Vining's life in high school. It wasn't until she was a college student that she began running for personal enjoyment.

She said her next goal is to run a three-hour marathon, which, she added, will probably take her about one year to accomplish.

As for the Boston Marathon, the blond, blue-eyed, slender runner said she hopes only to run better than her previous personal best.

Shirley Weaver, gymnastics coach at Charles M. Russell High School in Great Falls and a former teacher of Vining's, ran in the Boston Marathon last year. She said it is a "tremendous emotional experience" and added that "women marathoners are really celebs" for that one day.

Weaver added that Vining shouldn't have to worry about the renowned Heartbreak Hill, because it's nothing compared to the hills and mountains in Montana that challenge runners.

The women's Boston Marathon record, 2:26:46, was set by Allison Roe of New Zealand in 1981.

Vining has to pay her own way to Boston, but said she has gotten a "favorable response" from Missoula businesses that she has asked to sponsor her.

Outdoor natural science education academically, physically demanding

By Gordon Gregory

Kaimin Reporter

Ed Grumbine teaches typical university classes — natural history, environmental field studies and philosophy. But he teaches them in an out-of-the-way place — the canyon lands of southwestern Utah.

Grumbine's 15-credit, three-class program is held entirely outdoors. The mostly roadless desert area is the classroom, and the rock formations, geologic and archeologic structures provide most of the course material.

The course, titled "Canyons of Time," is one of several outdoor natural science programs offered by the University of California's Sierra Institute at Santa Cruz.

The courses are open to anyone over age 18. Academic credits earned from the interdisciplinary courses will transfer to most universities, and out-of-state tuition is not charged. Several University of Montana students have taken the courses and had their credits transferred here.

Grumbine, a recent graduate from UM's environmental studies program, said his courses are academically and sometimes from park service libraries.

"Students are deeply involved in actual academic work," Grumbine said. "The wilderness is simply the classroom, and what I emphasize is learning in the academic sense. This is not just a course that gives credit for backpacking."

Other universities also provide outside wilderness education.

UM has a 15-credit "Wilderness and Civilization" program during Fall Quarter, and a 13-credit "Rivers and Civilization" program is being offered this spring. Both are taught through the Wilderness Institute and include backpacking or float trips, but are not taught entirely outside.

"That's the difference between the Sierra Institute and other wilderness schools," Grumbine said. "Going outside and teaching, say field ecology, completely out of a backpack is extending the idea of a field trip to its logical conclusion."

"What better way to learn natural history than to be physically involved in the surroundings that display it?" he added.

Grumbine's program includes instruction on desert survival, natural and human history and philosophy.

Course requirements include readings, keeping both a field and personal journal, small essay assignments and an in-depth field project.

The daily routine includes seminar discussions, lectures by Grumbine, field assignments, readings and hikes.

Grumbine said his courses are tough and that he is continually encouraged by the performance of most students.

"The general quality of student presentations has been 'A plus.' People have to want to go through the rigors and challenges, so as a rule, I get incredibly motivated students. In fact, it's sometimes hard to motivate them to stop."

"Students coming from the traditional educational establishment acquire a new perspective about learning," he said.

physically demanding.

During the quarter, students participate in four backpacking trips, each 10 to 12 days long. Most of the terrain is roadless, and in addition to camping equipment, students must carry textbooks and other necessary scholastic material. Between each trip, students take one or two days off to re-supply, do laundry and gather research material solve the rape problem itself, but would help stop the "fear of rape."

CB passed the lighting motion with only one dissenting vote.

"This will be the only time this CB will actually have listened to what the students said," said CB delegate Jenny Fenchak, junior in sociology and communications.

ASUM President Steve Spaulding cautioned CB that the request should be especially "well-worded" because of intense competition for the building fees money.

Money from the building fees may be spent for construction of the new Fine Arts/Radio-Television building.

At the start of the meeting, CB delegate Anitra Hall, senior in history and political science, chastised members of ASUM for not trusting her supervision of the Liberal Arts building polling table in yesterday's ASUM election.

Hall said she resented being "watchdogged" by ASUM Vice President Eric Johnson, junior in psychology, at various times during her 10-hour shift supervising the table. She also said she was glad the elections were over because of the "dishonesty, name-calling and backbiting" she's seen.

At the end of the meeting, CB delegates John Smith, senior in philosophy and economics, and Kent Spence, senior in finance, "mooned" the board. As they pulled down their pants, they said, "May humor and comedy always live in your hearts."

"Whenever he wanted information, he was always coming up with a committee to get it."

Hall said Johnson was efficient in carrying out his committee duties. "Eric really pulled (the committees) up by the bootstraps," she said.

Johnson said that his year in office has been a learning experience, but added that he is tired.

"I'm considering dropping out this (next) quarter," Johnson said. "I'm burnt out and exhausted."

Hartman said that even if only one person applied, he should have been interviewed.

Carlos Pedraza, sophomore in general studies and honors and chairman of Publications Board before it was restructured by CB last week, didn't interview Rygg because of the fact that Rygg was the only applicant.

The board will meet today at 10 a.m. and will interview all applicants tonight.

seats, the Active Students' Party grabbed nine, the Students for Responsible Government received eight and unaffiliated candidates took three. The Progressive Party did not win any seats.

There probably will be a recount in the unorganized off-campus race because of close vote counts.

Mike Tropila and Ryan Ushijima each received 203 votes and won seats on CB, while Jill Ingraham and Susan Silverberg each garnered 202 votes and were not placed on the board.

Johnson said he will continue to have some connection with ASUM government and will continue to search for a new location for the ASUM Day Care facility.

The major problem with this year's ASUM administration was a lack of responsibility, he said.

"The work load was not fairly distributed among the (ASUM) executives," Johnson said. "There was an unfair burden on those willing to accept responsibility and those who took their responsibility seriously."
